And they're off!

On Saturday, May 24, Centre 48 in Montmartre hosted their 22nd annual Perogy Run to raise money for their art and educational programming. 70 runners participated in the event, including a 5 km and 10 km race through Montmartre's streets. A kid's 1 km race preceded the main event. An additional 23 people joined the runners after in the Sacred Heart Roman Catholic Church basement for a perogy lunch. See story on page 14.

Kronau MS advocate prepares for Pilot Butte rodeo

By Ashley Scarfe
Grasslands News

Next month, the Pilot Butte Rodeo will return for its 32nd year. Running June 13 to 15, the rodeo promises a full weekend of fun for all ages with a Family Fun Day on Saturday, heavy horse pulls, CCA Rodeo, chuckwagons, cabaret, beer gardens and much more. For Caitlyn Stenberg, all the planning in the lead up to the event comes down to Friday night, when her Caitlyn's Crusaders Bronc Match kicks off the weekend.

Stenberg, event coordinator for the bronc match, was diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis in 2018. Since then, she has created Caitlyn's Crusaders MS Walk Team which has been raising money for MS research through bake sales, 50/50 draws, a funspiel and the bronc match.

"I started it because rodeo has been in my blood since I was nine, and actually, the very first rodeo I had ever worked or did anything with was Pilot Butte," Stenberg says. "So I grew up going to Pilot Butte Rodeo."

Stenberg explains that after being diagnosed with MS in 2018, and then suffering through the pandemic a year and a half later, she decided to brainstorm new ways to fundraise. She thought a bronc match would be an excellent way to merge her passion for both rodeo and supporting MS research.

"I love bronc riding," Stenberg says. "It's my favourite event. The boys that ride the broncs, that's my kind of people, and they wanted to support me too in my MS journey. In 2021, we had the first Caitlyn's Crusaders Bronc Match in August. I phoned up the guys in Pilot Butte and said, 'Hey, do you think this would be something you'd be interested in hosting? Can I do it with your weekend so it all works together?' and they were all in. They gave me Friday night; it really added to their weekend and it's been really good so far."

Stenberg says registration for the event closes on June 6 and, at the moment, there are ten riders registered.

"By next week we will probably have 15 to 20 registered," Stenberg says. "They are from all over the place. There are six registered right now who are over here from Australia, rodeoing for the summer. There's some more local from Saskatchewan, and we will probably get some from Manitoba and a couple from Alberta. The rodeo family and circuit is so large, they all travel. They will come a day early because it's for a great cause, and we all have that personal connection."

Stenberg says the audience will not see her riding a bronc during the event, but can look forward to her in the arena as an announcer where she will interview the participants at the end of their rides.

Stenberg says the support of the rodeo community, and her support group through Caitlyn's Crusaders, is what keeps her costs low and allows her to donate as much as possible to MS research.

"Because rodeo is such a tight-knit family, my judges donate their time, my pick-up men donate their time, my announcer donates his time, and my office help donates their time," Stenberg says. "My team sells the 50/50 tickets for me. They stand at the gate for hours, taking donations."

Entry to the bronc match is by donation. Any and all monetary contributions are accepted. In the ring, winners of the event will leave with a knife created and crafted by Dan Mcgrath from Qu'Appelle.

"Most events like these, they win a buckle or, places like Corpus Christi you win a surfboard because it's right on the water and the surfing down there is amazing," Stenberg explains. "I think Dan approached me and said he could make knives for the winners. Then they use them all the time. They are on their jeans, on their backs when they are out during the week. While they are ranching in their day-to-day job, they are using them. It's something they can use and display, and when people see it, they can say it was from Caitlyn's Bronc Match."

Caitlyn's Crusaders Bronc Match kicks off Friday, June 13, following a rodeo slack at 6 pm.

Drive-in car bingo held to support Legacy Park

By Sarah Pacio
Grasslands News

Randy Clark Legacy Park is nearing completion, with fundraising in progress for the project's final phase.

For the past few years, a committee has been working to improve the outdoor space on the west side of Wolseley High School. The development is a means of honouring former teacher Randy Clark and encourages students and community members to carry on his legacy of sports involvement. Clark passed away from cancer in 2018 but, during his 32 years as a teacher, he coached multiple high school teams and served on the executive board for two regional athletic associations, making a positive impact on those around him.

Due to the large scope of the Legacy Park project, the organizing committee determined it would be completed in three phases. Since 2019, numerous fundraisers, donations and sponsorships have led to the completion of Phases 1 and 2. The site now has a refurbished, fenced court for basketball and pickleball, with a large gazebo beside it and picnic tables for outdoor classroom space.

The group has collected nearly enough funds to finance the final phase but continues to seek support for the remaining amount. This will provide for installation of a monument with information and donor recognition, a volleyball net and lighting. Landscaping around the recreation amenities would also be completed in Phase 3.

On May 23, committee members partnered with Twilite Drive-in to host car bingo before a showing of *Snow White. Approximately 50 cars lined up in front of the big screen for the event, eager to claim one of the ten prize packages that were sponsored by local businesses and committee members.

In addition to proceeds from 175 bingo cards, additional funds were raised through a hamburger sale and 50/50 raffle. Many participants also stayed to enjoy the evening's entertainment. Bingo at the drive-in raised $2,300 for the park project and organizers are grateful for the community's support.

Randy Clark's wife Christine is a member of the organizing committee and said that participants came from Wolseley, Carry the Kettle First Nation, Indian Head and Regina.

"It went well, we had a lot of compliments on it. We were very happy with how it went, and it was fun!" Clark told Grasslands News.

The committee estimates that it will need $4,000 to $5,000 to fully complete the Legacy Park project. Pickleball and basketball fundraising tournaments are being tentatively planned in cooperation with Wolseley Recreation Board's Rock the Rink event this summer. Donations can also be arranged by contacting Wolseley High School at 306-698-2591 or Wolseley Town Office at 306-698-2477.

Shrinking share for farmers, high food prices for consumers

Submitted
Grasslands News

As food prices remain high, the share of the food dollar reaching Saskatchewan farmers continues to decline.

The Agricultural Producers Association of Saskatchewan (APAS) has released its third Farmers and Food Prices report that follows seven key grocery products derived from Saskatchewan commodities.

"Over the past three years, the situation has not improved," notes APAS President Bill Prybylski. "Farmers are getting less, while consumers continue to pay high grocery prices. This year's report isn't any different, showing a further dip in what farmers make from their commodities, even though food prices are barely budging downward."

This report comes at a time of economic uncertainty and fluctuating market conditions. Persistent volatility continues to undermine reliable crop and livestock price forecasts, leaving producers in a precarious position. The data in the 2025 report highlights year-over-year decreases in farm shares and commodity prices, underscoring the challenges faced by the agriculture industry. For example, the changes in farm shares are stark, with a 12-point decrease in canola oil.

"At a time when political changes impact the lives of everyday consumers, who are increasingly seeking explanations for high food costs, the importance of food security and transparency in food prices has never been greater," emphasizes Prybylski. "This report underscores the growing concern among consumers, who face high retail prices yet want to ensure that farmers receive a fair and sustainable income."

APAS continues to champion the need for an equitable, accountable, and transparent food system that supports farmers, safeguards consumers and ensures a stable food supply. This report provides an examination of what farmers earn when consumers purchase food products, such as margarine, demonstrating the growing disparity between farmgate prices and retail costs.

Dousing for the dead

Man claims he can locate human remains using copper rods typically used to find water

By Alan Hustak
Grasslands News

As he walked slowly across an ancient burial ground in Fort Qu'Appelle with copper dousing rods in his hands, Brian Donbrook claims he could find the exact spot of unmarked graves beneath the manicured grass.

Traditionally the rods are used to locate water but practitioners such as Donbrook believe they can also point to traces of buried human remains. The uses of dousing rods, or divining rods as they are sometimes called, is highly debated with skeptics suggesting there is no empirical evidence to prove they work. But as Donbrook walked across the graveyard the rods vibrated and crossed at five-foot intervals which he said indicated something was buried below the surface.

"I have no idea how they work, but as you can see for yourself this place is full of graves and the rods point to them," the retired Regina chiropractor said as he handed this reporter the devices to use. Once you have them in your own hands it is easy to believe something is happening as they spin out of control on their own. But unless you can actually dig and prove that it is a grave – or something else – the rod points to underground – it is perhaps wise to keep a healthy dose of skepticism.

Still Donbrook insists some practitioners can not only locate graves but can identify whether the remains they have found are those of a male or a female. "I do this just for the fun of it," he said.

A plaque on the monument that marks the sacred ground on Segwun Avenue that was erected by the File Hills Chiefs Association next to the provincial courthouse suggests the graves belong to those who died during the Treaty 4 negotiations in 1874. There is no record that anyone died during those negotiations.

When the site was uncovered in 1985 it was determined the graves were in a short-lived Anglican cemetery opened in the 1850s by an Indigenous missionary Charles Pratt. It had long been abandoned by the time Treaty 4 negotiations began.

Beck calls for action on Sask. priorities in letters to federal ministers

Submitted
Grasslands News

As the sitting resumes in the House of Commons, Saskatchewan NDP Leader Carla Beck sent five letters to a total of nine ministers in Carney's cabinet calling for action on Saskatchewan issues that have too often been ignored by federal governments of all stripes.

"Canadians were incredibly frustrated with Justin Trudeau's government and his failure to deliver results on important files," said Beck. "It's no secret that this frustration was felt more strongly in Saskatchewan than anywhere else in Canada.

"We need to see real progress on these critical issues facing our country. This is a critical moment of consensus, where we can focus on our future and get generational projects built."

Beck's federal priorities include:

- Changing the equalization formula to be fairer for Saskatchewan

- Making generational investments in infrastructure to get Saskatchewan's exports to new markets, including more rail lines, pipelines and power lines

- Renewing the $10/day child-care agreement

- Repealing Bill C-69 and revising the Clean Electricity Regulations

- Building a stronger relationship with Indigenous peoples based on action, not just promises

- Protecting workers and businesses from the impact of tariffs while working day and night to get them removed

"The new Prime Minister has committed to a new approach, and I am optimistic that his commitment will be met by real action by this new government on the issues that matter most to people in my province," Beck said.

"Our economy needs to be more resilient in the face of Donald Trump's threats and the people of Western Canada deserve to see a bright future for themselves by staying in a strong and united Canada."

Local area reps chosen during MS-N election

By Sarah Pacio
Grasslands News

Métis citizens in Saskatchewan have elected their leadership for the next four years.

Métis-Nation Saskatchewan (MN-S) represents Métis citizens throughout the province, acting on behalf of their interests in various aspects of society. MN-S is governed by the Métis-Nation Legislative Assembly. This is partly comprised of a provincial council, which includes an executive committee and elected representatives from 12 regions of the Saskatchewan. Elections are held every four years and Métis citizens age 16 and older are eligible to vote. This year, advanced polls were held during the first two weeks of May and the final election day was May 24.

Unofficial results were posted to MN-S website by Monday morning and indicated that Glen H. McCallum had been reelected as president. The unofficial results showed Michelle Ann Leclair receiving 1788 votes for vice president and Karen A. Larocque receiving 1706. Votes for treasurer were also close, with 1248 for Jeremy (DJ) Denomie and 1205 for Dale McAuley, as were the votes for Eastern Region 2, with 96 in favor of Brent Wilfred John Digness and 94 for Nancy Jayne Duns. Recounts will be completed for these candidates, with official results released within the next two weeks.

The Grasslands News coverage area is primarily within Eastern Region 2A and 3 (ER2A and ER3).

Broadview, Grayson, and Melville are included in ER2A. Tim J. W. Roussin did not submit his name for another term, but three other candidates sought to fill his place: Derek (Porky) Langan, Darcy Raymond Lepowick and Gary Allan Pelletier. Lepowick, who is from Yorkton, received 138 votes and was elected to represent ER2A in the upcoming term.

ER3 encompasses a large area from the Manitoba border in the east to Regina, and from the province's southern border north to Foam Lake. This includes the towns of Whitewood, Kipling, Grenfell, Wolseley, Indian Head, Fort Qu'Appelle and many other communities served by Grasslands newspapers. There were two candidates for ER3 in the recent election: incumbent Marg Louise Friesen and Valerie Raye McLeod. Friesen was reelected with 156 votes, while McLeod received only 41. Friesen had previously been reelected by acclamation in 2021. She is from the Qu'Appelle Valley and resides in Indian Head.

Educational leaders outline concerns

Submitted
Grasslands News

Canada's teacher organization presidents from across Canada met in Saskatchewan on May 25 and 26 to discuss protecting public education across Canada. The discussion focused on two critical concerns: the ongoing challenges with teacher retention and recruitment, and the rising incidents of violence and aggression in schools.

The presidents from the national and provincial teacher's organizations affirmed their shared commitment to public education and called for governments to invest in teachers, student supports, and safer school environments.

The presidents' stance is reinforced by recent findings from the Canadian Teachers' Federation (CTF/FCE). Results of the CTF/FCE 2024 Parachute Survey highlight the seriousness of the situation:

- Nearly 80 percent of teachers report difficulty managing unpredictable and increasing workloads; and 70 percent identify poor working conditions as a significant factor.

- 95 percent of educators observe that staff shortages are negatively affecting students, with the most serious impacts being unmet academic needs and reduced access to specialized supports.

- 55 percent of educators report having experienced violence or aggression in the past year.

- Of those who reported incidents, only 25 percent indicate that appropriate action was taken by safety committees or officers, while school administrators report being overwhelmed.

"These findings reflect mounting pressure on teachers and the broader public education system. Teachers and students across Canada deserve safe, supportive environments for working and learning, yet many continue to face difficult conditions and challenges that affect both student well-being and learning outcomes. Without immediate action, the profession risks losing more qualified, experienced teachers, making it challenging to recruit and retain new educators. Current challenges are pushing educators out of the profession and making it less appealing to those considering it," said the teacher's organizations in a statement. "It's not too late to turn this around but growing issues like school violence need urgent attention."

Together, the presidents are calling on all provincial and territorial governments as well as the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada to take immediate action for the good of students across this country. Key priorities include:

- Reducing class sizes to allow for meaningful instruction and student support.

- Increasing numbers of education specialists and support staff in schools.

- Addressing class complexity and ensuring safer learning environments.

- Transparent reporting of violent incidents, including actions taken.

Immunization rates key to combating measles in Sask.

Increased cases are being reported throughout province

By Shaynee Modien
Local Journalism Initiative Reporter

Measles, a disease thought to be eradicated in Canada since 1998, is once again posing a problem in the Great White North. This highly contagious disease has even brought a mild surge in cases to the middle of the prairies in Saskatchewan.

Dr. David Torr, a Medical Health Officer for the Southwest region of the Saskatchewan Health Authority (SHA), has stated that there have been 45 reported measles cases in Saskatchewan from mid-March to mid-May this year, compared to a total of just two cases between the years 2015 to 2024.

Despite this, Saskatchewan has been doing a good job of getting the word out, with Dr. Torr noting, "We've had relatively good immunization rates in the mid to high 80 per cent range, but not quite yet at the 95 per cent needed to attain good protection of the population."

The SHA continues to urge people to arrange a time to attend public health offices and get their free shots. Vaccinations can also be obtained at certain clinics in the province where public health offices are unavailable.

Getting your measles immunization shots not only protects you but helps prevent the spread of the disease.

With an increase in immigration from around the world, the Saskatchewan Health Authority has been translating health updates into languages other than English to better assist newcomers to the province.

While Canada continues to make vaccinations a priority, there are some countries in the world where measles vaccinations are not available.

In Saskatchewan, the provincial government does not mandate vaccinations for those who have recently arrived in the province, but it strongly advises and encourages people to get vaccinated says Dr. Torr.

According to Dr. Torr, the measles surge in Canada can be attributed to a few key factors. Firstly, a decline in vaccination rates globally has contributed to the spread of the disease. Additionally, increased travel across the world has enabled the virus to spread more easily.

Dr. Torr says the current number of cases in the province is a "moving target," and advised people to check the SHA website for exposure updates. www.saskhealthauthority.ca/measles

saskhealthauthority.ca/measles

A recent risk update from the Public Health Agency of Canada has suggested that if the increase in measles continues, it could mean Canada would lose its status as a country with eradicated measles.

Dr. Torr, however, remains optimistic, pointing out that Saskatchewan has relatively good immunization rates, even with a minor reduction in immunization.

His message is simple: "The more people we get vaccinated, the less we shall see it."

Tourist Booth Volunteers Needed

We are looking for volunteers to help with our Tourist Booth this summer. This is a great opportunity for looking to meet new people who are traveling through our Region.

We are hoping to open the Tourist Booth on Friday, May 16th for the Long Weekend. The operating hours will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Volunteers are scheduled either from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. or 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. and we can work around your schedule. If you are volunteering on behalf of a local community organization, the town will make a donation to that group! If you are interested, please email indianheadcdc@sasktel.net or call 306-695-2742.

Mixed results as Sask. Growth Plan hits halfway point

By Brad Brown
Grasslands News

It's been a good half-decade in Saskatchewan if you're a cattle farmer, or a potash or uranium miner.

For the rest of us, at least as measured against the Saskatchewan Party's much-hyped 2020-30 Saskatchewan Growth Plan, not so much.

But first, the good news.

The provincial government's growth plan, as announced in November 2019, included 30 goals to reach by the time the calendar turned to 2030.

Among those was a target to grow livestock cash receipts to $3 billion annually by 2030 – a mission that has already been achieved, and then some.

Government data shows livestock cash receipts for Saskatchewan producers hit $3.53 billion 2023 and increased further to $3.92 billion in 2024, nearly doubling the revenue generated in 2020.

The Sask. Party also pledged to grow uranium sales to $2 billion, with the actual figure reaching $2.6 billion in 2024, and further to increase potash sales to $9 billion, both by the year 2030.

And while a soft world market for potash has kept global prices down for a prolonged period – Saskatchewan sold approximately half its target dollar figure worth of potash last year – the province did set a record for volume of potash sold, indicating meaningful progress on this file too.

Across the board, these figures create investment and employment in our province and deserve to be celebrated.

What they also do is mask a number of the provincial government's failures to deliver on substantial promises it made when it released its growth plan.

Most prominently is the Saskatchewan Party's 2019 commitment to maintain a balanced budget throughout the 2020s.

For those of you keeping score at home, our government went on to deliver five consecutive deficit budgets totaling $6.2 billion, before pitching a $12.2 million surplus for 2025-26.

Could those deficits – this despite a nearly $1.1 billion increase (52 per cent or so) in provincial sales tax revenue since 2020 – be the reason Premier Scott Moe and Co. have also left our local governments in the lurch when it comes to revenue sharing?

While it's been trendy for the province to promote "record" revenue sharing with municipalities over the past few years, what the talking heads never mention is that Moe promised $2.5 billion in annual municipal revenue sharing by 2030.

The most partisan and optimistic commentators on this file would happily hitch their wagon to the $361.8 million in revenue sharing as of Jan. 1 – a record figure, and up 30 per cent from the same date five years ago.

The more grounded take is that annual revenue sharing needs to increase approximately 800 per cent from its current growth rate in order to meet that $2.5 billion target.

And spoiler alert if you're betting on either slim or none regarding the chances of that happening: Slim just left the building.

Then there's the matter of population growth.

We were told Saskatchewan would be home to 1.4 million people by 2030.

This, the story went, would increase our tax base, the number of workers available to employers and, by extension, the overall amount of financial investment in Saskatchewan.

What this target didn't account for was 28 consecutive quarters of negative interprovincial migration under Moe's leadership.

While our population has continued to grow overall, it's done so entirely on the back of international migration.

And then, once people arrive here, they don't stay.

Case in point: Statistics Canada figures show Saskatchewan has netted a loss of 56,135 more residents to other provinces than have moved here from within Canada since Jan. 1, 2018, though the overall provincial population has grown by 81,483 people since Jan. 1, 2020.

Taken altogether, Saskatchewan remains on pace to miss the government's population target by nearly 68,000 people or approximately 30 per cent based on its starting point of 1.17 million, and would need to double its growth rate of the last five years in order to reach that 2030 goal.

(We'll set aside, for now, the entirely predictable issues around overcrowded schools and hospitals that have come with even this modest growth in recent years.)

While it would be foolish, regardless of government, to throw the baby out with the bath water just for the sake of it, it's also never a bad idea to consider whether we collectively are getting what we were promised.

And in this case, the results are decidedly mixed for most of us who don't work in a few select industries.

Building bureaucracy part 4 – The cost of compliance

By Connie Schwalm
Grasslands News

Whenever we choose to live, work or simply walk into a building, we trust that the building is safe and sufficient for the purpose that drew us inside it.

So, few would argue that having a minimum standard for buildings constructed in the province is a bad thing, or that the National Building Code could not serve well as that standard.

However, as Bob Baker, owner of Professional Building Inspections (PBI), a private company which is contracted to provide Building Inspection Services by approximately 200 municipalities in the province notes, “The Building Code is a National Code, but not all provinces use the Building Code as their standard. So, the Building Code means nothing without provincial legislation behind it.”

In Saskatchewan, The Construction Codes Act (CC Act) and Regulations which came into force on January 1, 2022 made the most recent versions of the National Building Code, the National Energy Code for Buildings and the National Plumbing Code the construction standards for the province.

Furthermore, in a document released by the provincial government entitled “The Construction Codes Act and Rural Communities” it states that “compliance with the CC Act and construction standards is a shared responsibility” that is based on five principles. The Government of Saskatchewan is responsible for the legislative, regulatory and policy framework. Local authorities such as municipalities are responsible for administration and enforcement. Those local authorities are therefore required to hire or contract and appoint Building Officials to work for them. Contractors, architects and engineers work for building owners.

Building owners – under the current legislation – are responsible for compliance.

This means that a building owner must comply not only with provincial legislation and the construction standards that it sets, but also with the Building Bylaws in their municipality.

And knowing what compliance will cost can be difficult.

Under the CC Act all municipalities are required to have a Building Bylaw, and as Bill Hawkins (Saskatchewan Government Relations – Building & Technical Standards) explains, a bylaw was provided through legislation to any municipality that did not write its own.

“In the past, we would often, get calls from a municipality that didn’t have a Building Bylaw, and they were trying to do things retroactively because someone was building something wrong or building something they didn’t approve of. So, we would get that call asking, ‘How can we get control of this?’

“So, we drafted a model bylaw and provided it to every municipality in the province that did not have a Building Bylaw in place. We said, ‘Here’s a model. You can improve upon it, fix it, amend it to suit your needs. But if you don’t do that, the model bylaw will automatically become your Building Bylaw as of January 1, 2023.’”

He notes that the Building Bylaw a municipality writes is reviewed and approved by the provincial government’s Building & Technical Standards Branch.

“We approve municipality’s Building Bylaws and the reason we do that is that we don’t want municipalities – large or small – writing provisions in a Building Bylaw that conflict with the CC Act. And we’ve seen that happen. A municipality will decide – ‘Oh we can write our own Building Bylaw, so we’ll write whatever we want to into it.’ And we’ve seen some silly things written into Building Bylaws. Most often, the municipality is trying to write zoning provisions into the Building Bylaw, and there’s whole other piece of legislation that applies to community planning and zoning. So, we try to keep municipalities in the right lane when they’re talking about Building Codes and Building Bylaws.”

However, the fees charged by municipalities for Building Permits, as well as the fees charged by Building Officials and private companies like PBI which provide this service to municipalities, are not subject to such oversight.

Baker explains that generally, fees for the services his company provides are incorporated into the Building Permit fee.

“The fees for everything that we do are charged to the municipality, and the municipality recovers those cost through the Building Permit Fee. So, the owner’s costs associated with Plan Approval and Building Inspection should be included in the Building Permit Fee that an owner pays when they receive that permit.”

But he points out that additional fees might arise and notes that legislation allows municipalities to add any unpaid fees to an owner’s tax roll.

“If an inspection fails, there may be a re-inspection. Or if an owner decides to change something or add to the project, there may need to be an additional inspection, and there will be additional fees for extra inspections like that. The fees for extra inspections will not be build into the building permit fee. And if there is a situation where there has been a legal order against the property, there may be additional fees associated with that. The CC Act is set up so that these additional fees can be billed to the owner and added to their taxes if they are not paid.”

Baker goes on to say that fees charged by companies like his can vary, depending on how the company chooses to determine their fees.

“There’s a lot of difference in Saskatchewan in the way that fees for the services we provide are calculated. With residential projects for example, we charge according to the different project type. But other service providers charge according to the value of construction. So, for the same house, that company would look at the cost of building that house and can charge according to that. But we look at the type of project that it is and the square footage of the house, since that determines how many inspections we’ll need to do.”

Moreover, Hawkins says that each municipality is able to decide how much it will charge for a Building Permit fee.

“We do not set Building Permit fees, that fee is determined by the municipality. And the method used to determine the cost of a Building Permit varies from municipality to municipality. Sometimes, these fees are based on the cost of construction. For example, here in Regina, I think that the Building Permit fee is around $8/$1000 of construction value. So, if you have a $300,000 construction project, the Building Permit fee will be $2400.

It’s a Strange World

Federal judges in the US have been receiving hundreds of unwanted pizza deliveries since February, but these are certainly not random acts of kindness. The judges say the pizza deliveries are threatening, and largely going to judges overseeing lawsuits that are challenging Trump administration policies. Some have even been delivered to relatives of judges. This is being seen as a warning that ‘they’ know where these judges live and where their families are. This is an administration that has been brazen in its attacks on the judiciary.

Of course, some people will say ‘just accept the gift’, such as President Trump says he will do after Qatar offered to gift him a $400 million luxury jet that he basically gets to keep if he ever leaves the Presidency. He compared it to someone saying a putt is a ‘gimee.’ He said anyone would be crazy not to accept such a gift and walk to the next hole. Others know that Qatar is not doing that for nothing. Trump has claimed this trip to the Middle East as looking for business deals for America, but too many see it being marked by potential private business deals that will greatly enhance the interests of his inner circle. Since the aircraft is 14 years old, it will require millions (maybe up to $1 billion) for a makeover to meet standards for Air Force One.

For the first time ever, cardinals have named an American to be the new pope. Robert Francis Prevost, 69, received votes from at least 89 of the 133 cardinals in the conclave, a two-thirds majority, to become the new pontiff. Although he is a registered Republican, he has publicly been a critic of Trump, which is why the President did not want to see him as the Pope. An online source said, “Nobody thought the Pope would ever be an American, but that’s how much the Vatican didn’t want to pay the tariff.”

A 75-year-old Illinois man has had an unusual surgery. Fifty-one years ago, Arthur Lampitt smashed his 1963 Thunderbird into a truck. His fractured hip drew attention away from his injured arm, which eventually healed. Recently, the arm started getting bigger and began hurting. He saw a doctor who removed a 7-inch turn signal lever from his left arm.

A motorist called the Ogden (Utah) Police Dept. to report a reckless driver. Police located the vehicle but backed off, ending what could have been a wild chase. Soon, a crash was reported and they found the same vehicle. Neither the driver, a 7-year-old boy, nor his passenger, a 5-year-old sister, were injured. In fact, they scrambled out of the car and flipped off the driver of the car they hit. Their mother, Whitney Bush, was awakened by the police at her home about 10 miles away. She insists that all four children were asleep when she had checked. While police have not pressed charges due to the boy’s age, Bush says she is requiring him to perform community service for neighbors. She admits her son has had some “behavioral issues,” but was denied help because he was “too young.”

A NHS worker in the UK has been awarded close to £30,000 (CAD $55,000) because a former colleague compared her to Star Wars bad guy Darth Vader. In the UK, the NHS (National Health Service) is a publicly funded healthcare system. Lorna Rooke said in 2021 a co-worker took a Star Wars-themed Myers-Briggs personality test on her behalf. The test likens participants to one of the franchise’s characters. Rooke, a blood donation bank employee, was given Darth Vader — the Sith lord widely viewed as one of the most powerful, hated villains of the franchise — as her personality doppelganger. She claimed, apparently successfully, that her colleague, Amanda Harber, had neither permission to take the test in her name nor to distribute the results to other staff members. As a result of the quiz, Rooke was made to feel widely disliked, which contributed to her low mood and led her to feel anxious in the workplace.

Near Uskegee, Ala., a runaway kangaroo named Sheila shut down a stretch of interstate highway before troopers and the animal’s owner “wrangled the wayward marsupial.” Macon County Sheriff Andre Brunson said that no one believed the call about a kangaroo. Patrick Starr, the owner, used a dart to tranquilize the animal. Starr’s family runs a pumpkin patch and petting zoo, but Sheila is just a personal pet.

“Old age has come at a terrible time. Just as I was starting to know it all, I’m now forgetting everything I knew.”

Ain’t that the truth? Keep reading between the lines. and maybe something will stick...

Regional park pass library program revived for 2025

By Brad Brown
Grasslands News

After almost four weeks on life support, the Saskatchewan Library Association's Regional Parks Lending Program has been given a stay of execution for at least one more year.

The program, which was launched as a pilot project in 2022, allows library patrons to borrow a park pass – valid at any of Saskatchewan's regional parks – for up to seven days at a time, covering the cost of daily or weekly park entry fees.

In late April the three-year partnership between the Saskatchewan Libraries Association (SLA), Saskatchewan Regional Parks Association (SRPA) and Saskatchewan Parks and Recreation Association (SPRA) appeared to be over when local libraries announced the program would not run again in 2025 due to "funding challenges."

Then, May 22, the regional parks group issued a news release announcing the program would in fact return for this year, though it noted that "for the long-term sustainability of the program, funding options are being explored."

SRPA executive director Michelle Giesbrecht told Grasslands News on Tuesday that the program's future was placed in doubt when the SPRA – which is funded in part by Sask. Lotteries – offered a reduced amount of funding to buy and distribute the passes for 2025.

"There were some cuts within the association that was providing that funding for us, then what happened was we had to wait for our annual general meeting to take a vote from the membership whether we could carry the program forward ourselves for just this year," said Giesbrecht.

The regional parks board approved the motion to take on an increased financial role and keep the program going for this year, while also accepting a reduced amount of support from the SPRA.

Giesbrecht added that individual parks are also foregoing their share of the revenue from the passes purchased this year, another change from previous years.

"The parks typically would get remuneration for the passes that were sold but they will not be getting that this year. They were kind enough to just approve the program as is," she said.

News of the lending program's revival was welcomed with open arms in White City, where library board chair Justine Walton said their allocation of passes has routinely been fully booked throughout the summer months.

"We were all disappointed to hear of the challenges with funding," Walton told Grasslands News. "We were told just to wait and in the meantime we said we would even buy passes just for our own library, but we're very, very, very grateful to hear there is new funding for this program."

"It's been a very popular program."

Yes, even in White City where the closest regional parks (at Montmartre, Avonlea and Weyburn) are almost an hour's drive away.

Turtle tanning

A turtle sits on a log in the Qu'Appelle River basking in the sunshine that the area has been enjoying for the last week. Turtles are a common site along the shorelines of the valley river.

"I remember with provincial parks when you could just go there that weekend if you happened to have time you didn't think you had, plunk your kids on a picnic table and book a site," she said. "Now that competition for provincial park space is almost too much, and you get people who are booking spaces at two or three parks for the same weekend ... but that leaves a lot of us out of the loop when they're just eating the cost of the cancellation fee."

Passes will be available at libraries across the province beginning June 16 and ending Sept. 15.

Passes are available on a first-come, first-served basis and must be obtained in person at a local library branch.

dedicated to making customers look their very best.

Manager Wendy Nguyen came to Canada from Ho Chi Minh City four years ago and has operated spas in Alberta and in Regina before moving to Fort Qu'Appelle.

"Fort Qu'Appelle is an ideal location. There is a market here for manicures and pedicures," she said. "Before, everyone in the valley had to drive to Regina for professional restyling and makeup. Now it is available in Fort Qu'Appelle. I love it here."

Included in the spa services is a basic head massage with grapefruit essential oil which cleans the hair and is said to build full body. "It leaves the scalp refreshed, relaxed and beautifully managed," says Nguyen.

The facility has six bays which cater to both women and men. A basic head massage costs $40 for a relaxing half hour makeover The Deluxe Head spa costs $79 for an hour but until June 17 Elan Beauty and Spa is offering up to a 20 per cent discount on its various treatments as an opening special.

Building bureaucracy issues in Saskatchewan

- continued from page 7

"But some municipalities charge more than that. Other municipalities and building officials have more complex fee schedules, where they charge a certain amount for Plan Review, a specific amount for each inspection and a certain amount for travel. And if they are required to work outside of normal hours, they may charge a premium for that."

Consequently, Baker observes that estimates are provided to owners wanting to budget for their building project - by the municipality - on a case-by-case basis.

"When an owner contacts us, asking for an estimate of what our fees for their project would be, what I normally do is let the municipality know what our fees would be, and then the municipality can let the owner know what the Building Permit fee would be. The reason for that is that we have a standard amount that we would charge. But it is the municipality that decides what it will charge for a Building Permit fee. So, we can't really answer for every municipality on what the Building Permit fee would be."

Hawkins also notes that while some guidance on fees is provided to municipalities, the government will not interfere in something that Hawkins says is "market driven."

"The only guidance that we provide to municipalities and Building Officials on fees is that this is a fee for service and is not to be used as a money-generating thing like a tax. That fee should cover the cost of providing the Plan Review, all of the inspections and overhead of government (office space, benefits paid to employees etc.) And a Building Official should expect to earn enough to cover their costs.

"We do not get involved in fee schedules. That's also a market driven initiative. A municipality can go to the marketplace and look for these services. And if they find better value from another service provider, they can take advantage of that."

He points out that his department does recommend that a municipality should be ready to justify its fee.

"The one thing we recommend is that the municipality collect the fee and be ready to explain it. If I'm a ratepayer and I go to the municipal office to apply for my Building Permit, they need to be able to hand over to me a schedule that tells me what I'll pay for my Building Permit and be able to defend it and explain that schedule. The fees should not be excessive or nit-picky. When the owner picks up their Building Permit, they should know what the fee is and what variables are in the front end."

However, Hawkins admits that the only recourse that a ratepayer who believes the fees being charged are "excessive or nit-picky" has - is to appeal to the same local authority that set those fees in the first place.

"If a ratepayer doesn't understand or agree with the fee being charged, then they need to go back to the municipality and have a conversation with them. Those fees should only be in effect because the municipality has a contract with the Building Official or has a Building Official on staff or has written it into their Building Bylaw. So, it is the municipality that is responsible for the fees. It's a market-driven business that way, and we don't interfere in the marketplace like that."

For anyone embarking on a building project, the Building Permit fee and other additional fees associated with construction standards are only some of the figures that must be considered. Other costs of construction have risen dramatically over the past few years. Does the cost of compliance have a significant impact on the decision to go ahead with a construction project? Next week, we will endeavor to answer that question.

New fallen heroes medal being proposed in Sask.

Submitted
Grasslands News

The Saskatchewan NDP and a decorated first responder are calling on the Sask. Party government to create a new provincial medal to honour first responders, including police, fire, and emergency service personnel, who die in the line of duty or from work-related injuries.

David Reed, a Canadian Armed Forces veteran and advanced care paramedic, has spent years advocating for the creation of such a medal. He joined Saskatchewan NDP Policing, Corrections and Public Safety Shadow Minister Nicole Sarauer at the legislature to press the government to take action.

If adopted, the medal would be the first of its kind in Canada.

“There’s no way to fully repay the sacrifices our police, paramedics, and firefighters make to keep us safe — but that shouldn’t stop us from trying,” said Sarauer. “Families who’ve lost loved ones in the line of duty deserve lasting recognition they can carry forward for generations.”

Reed’s campaign has earned the formal backing of key first responder groups, including the Saskatchewan Federation of Police Officers, the Paramedic Services Chiefs of Saskatchewan, and the Saskatchewan Association of Chiefs of Police.

Despite this broad support, Minister of Corrections, Policing and Public Safety Tim McLeod rejected the proposal in a letter to MLA Sarauer — offering instead to pursue a memorial.

New campaign aims to draw physicians to the prairies

Provincial
Grasslands News

A physician recruitment advertising campaign with the slogan “Saskatchewan is Calling” has been launched by the Government of Saskatchewan in partnership with the Saskatchewan Health Authority (SHA) and Saskatchewan Healthcare Recruitment Agency (SHRA).

The campaign features practicing physicians based in North Battleford, Saskatoon and Swift Current, showcasing their work environments and how they spend their personal time. In their own words, they share why Saskatchewan is a great choice to build a successful medical practice and enjoy a high quality of life as a physician.

“We want to spread the word amongst physicians from Canada and abroad that Saskatchewan is a great place to put down roots, grow a fulfilling career and enjoy an excellent quality of life in one of our welcoming communities,” Health Minister Jeremy Cockrill said. “We have heard from many of our physicians, including those featured in this campaign, that Saskatchewan has what it takes to thrive. I encourage everyone to watch and share these inspirational stories.”

“I was pleased to participate in this campaign to showcase the benefits of working in Saskatchewan available to physicians,” North Battleford obstetrician and gynecologist Dr. Tin-Wing Yen said. “There are so many opportunities for family physicians and specialists in this province. Join our medical community and experience life under the living skies for yourself!”

Built around the stories of the three physicians, the “Saskatchewan is Calling” campaign offers a look at the professional and personal benefits of choosing the province, including:

- Competitive compensation, lower cost of living, comfortable lifestyle and shorter commutes;
- Team-based care and a supportive physician network; and
- Opportunities for career growth, academic and leadership roles.

The campaign will be in market immediately and will be placed on various provincial, national and international online platforms and physical locations such as billboards, subway stations and transit shelters, including in the United States. The campaign videos can also be watched at saskatchewan.ca/HHR.

“We know from our frontline work recruiting health practitioners that peer-to-peer interaction is very important to deepen the interest of a prospective candidate,” Saskatchewan Healthcare Recruitment Agency Chief Executive Officer

Terri Strunk said. “The stories of these physicians, highlighting why Saskatchewan is such a wonderful place to build a rewarding career in healthcare and enjoy a high quality of life, is very compelling to those who may not know much about our province.”

This more in-depth storytelling follows a recent US advertising campaign encouraging physicians to consider practising in Saskatchewan where they can enjoy a secure, stable and supportive environment and benefit from one of the most straightforward pathways to medical licensure.

“By investing in our provincial Health Human Resources Action Plan, Saskatchewan is a very attractive place for health care professionals to live, work and build a career.” Rural and Remote Health Minister Lori Carr said.

“We offer many career opportunities to physicians who want to practice in our great province, along with some of the best physician compensation rates in the country, a supportive work environment and other support programs.”

Locals tackle inaugural Cypress Hills distance race

By Brad Brown
Grasslands News

The inaugural Reesor 50 and Reesor Mountain Marathon didn't go exactly as planned for anyone, and maybe that's just the way the event's organizers and participants like it anyway.

With the courses for the 50-mile ultramarathon and 42.2-kilometre marathon already laid out, starting and ending at Historic Reesor Ranch southwest of Maple Creek, a half inch of rain decided to fall on the Cypress Hills region over the course of an hour, two days before things were to get underway May 17.

"Initially we had set the course and flagged it all, got it all ready, as a 50-mile loop," said Jeff Dudar, who served as race director alongside his brother Warren, under the Prairie Sky Running banner. "For the 50-mile loop you ran out around Reesor Lake into the Alberta side of the park then, originally, would come back in and run a 40-kilometre loop in the Saskatchewan side of the park. And the Sask. side of the park was originally set as the marathon course too."

Then came the rains. "And all the roads leading back, all the roads we used to access our Saskatchewan side of the park, were impassable and ... they wouldn't be drivable for race day, so what we ended up doing was create an out-and-back using the same course, and both the 50-mile runners and the Reesor Mountain Marathoners ran the same thing."

That meant one out-and-back to the lookout point just west of Reesor Lake for the marathoners and two back-and-forths for the ultramarathoners.

It also meant an added degree of difficulty that wasn't originally in the forecast.

"Arguably this course, the plan B course, would be harder than the original course because the original course, there was more running on the wider Trans Canada old road trail and old quad trails and lumber roads, mill roads," said Dudar.

"With the plan B course there's only about two kilometres of running that's not on single track and so it was actually just a beauty of a course."

Local Results

When the dust settled, to whatever extent it existed after the unwelcome precipitation, White City's Adam Putz was the top local finisher in the marathon, placing 40th out of 84 starters with a time of 5 hours 58 minutes 1 second.

Solomon Parker of Balgonie finished just over a half hour behind Putz in 6:30:14, good for 52nd place.

The ultramarathon saw Stuart Chutter of Osage finish 38th out of 67 starters in 13:25:43, while the Pilot Butte trio of Eric Parent, Jamie Tait and Jaxon Tait did not finish the race.

"There's going to be a sequel," Dudar said. "The ranch and the Reesor family was really happy with how things turned out, so before we left we were chatting with Jason (Reesor) about Year 2 and what that might look like."

"We're just trying to pin down some dates and we got a lot of great feedback on our plan B course so what we haven't decided is if we're going to revert to Plan A."

Gross Misconduct

Anyone who is a hockey fan knows what was happening.

There was the Winnipeg Jets' player, Mark Scheifele, head hanging low between his now softened shoulder blades, sitting alone in the penalty box as the Jets lost out to the Dallas Stars in NHL second-round playoff action.

Scheifele had been through the wringer.

Not only was his team, the President's Trophy winning Winnipeg Jets, playing for their playoff lives in Dallas, but his father had unexpectedly lost his life prior to game six of the series.

As people, we all know what it's like to lose someone important to us, and the grief that follows that sort of loss.

For Scheifele, it was a little bit different, because he had an important hockey game to play.

There's always going to be someone who says that he should have sat this contest out, as he was obviously still reeling from the news about his father Brad.

But Scheifele, one of the Jets' top players, wanted to play that game, because it meant a lot to his team, and because that's how his father would have wanted it.

Early in the game, the speedy and skilled forward had given the Jets their first goal of the game, and you could see the emotion drawn on Scheifele's face as he celebrated the tally with his teammates, knowing that he got that goal for his father, the goal that gave the Jets the lead.

It would be difficult to imagine all the things going through Scheifele's mind in the seconds following the goal.

What was he seeing? What was he feeling? He could articulate it a thousand times and we still wouldn't 'get it'.

I don't believe he could put his father's passing out of his mind for the game, so perhaps he was playing the game with the goal of performing his best for his dad, and honoring his memory as best he could while doing it.

The Stars edged closer, tying the game, and sending it to overtime.

And in the overtime, the unthinkable happened.

A turnover near the opposition blue line, saw Scheifele scramble behind the play, skating as hard as he could to break up a legitimate scoring chance, diving and sweeping his stick along the ice, and during the play, he tripped his opponent, bringing on the game's only penalty.

Scheifele said a few words to the referee as he made his way to the box, his head hanging low as he served his penalty, a penalty that wouldn't take the entire two-minutes it was assessed for, as the Stars slammed a puck home past goalie Connor Hellebuyck to win the game, and as a result, the series.

As he sat there on the penalty box bench, lingering a few moments longer than anyone wanted to see, it was as if someone let the air out of a balloon, and Scheifele, for the first time that day, wore the toll of two losses, one for his team and the other, for himself and his family.

I've been in a similar situation as a young man, losing a parent suddenly, and I had no envy for the young man who's heart just got broken twice in mere hours.

My father was my hero, as has been made obvious in any number of columns I've penned over the years, and I expect for Mark Scheifele, it was a similar story.

When he got out of the box, his teammates, his brothers, surrounded him, like a second family would in a similar situation. They understood the pain and they wanted to do whatever they could to insulate him from it, although the sting of this loss will last forever, unlike the loss of a game.

As the handshake line formed, casual hockey fans got to see why there's no other sport like it, with opposition players wishing Scheifele well and telling him how proud his father would have been of him for his heroics, his passion for the game and his leadership on one of the toughest days of his life.

It was a slow progression down the line, with each player trying to comfort someone who was their foe just moments earlier.

While all the well wishes and bear hugs were a tremendous reminder of the soul of the sport, the day will be etched onto the memory of Scheifele forever, and he won't be able to think about losing his dad, without remembering that he gave his all and everyone who watched, knew it.

It always hurts to lose your hero.

Even when you're a hero to others.

Ghost of 1967 still haunts the Maple Leafs

By Bruce Penton
Sports Columnist

Sports Column
By Bruce Penton

This could have been the year. Toronto Maple Leafs' fans across the country, of which there are millions, could hardly contain themselves when their beloved team won Game 6 of the Eastern Conference semi-final to force a Game 7 at home against Florida Panthers.

Beat the Panthers, advance to the Eastern final, cruise by the Carolina Hurricanes and cause mass hysteria in LeafLand by playing either Edmonton or Dallas for the Stanley Cup.

But the Ghost of 1967, the year the Leafs won their 13th and most recent Stanley Cup, got in the way. Florida knows a thing or two about playing critical playoff games and they bashed the Leafs 6-1 in that Game 7 showdown to extend that Stanley Cup drought to 58 years. It was Toronto's seventh straight Game 7 defeat.

There were tears. There was disbelief. There was angst. There were threats. And that was only from within the Leafs' locker room. Outside, in the stands of Scotiabank Arena in Toronto, angry and upset fans didn't hide their displeasure. At least one Toronto sweater got thrown onto the ice. Some guy paid more than $10 for a cup of cold beer and then figured centre ice, not his stomach, was the best place for it to settle.

So now what? Team president Brendan Shanahan has been ousted. The Leafs' 'Core Four' (Auston Matthews, Mitch Marner, John Tavares and William Nylander) are almost certainly going to be the Tippy Trio after Marner declares free agency this summer. Tavares, too, might go.

Marner, who stands fifth on the all-time Leafs' scoring table, behind only Mats Sundin, Darryl Sittler, Dave Keon and Borje Salming, is a hometown boy who seems to be the scapegoat for Toronto's troubles. The Leafs tried to trade him to Caroline in exchange for Mikko Rantanen in March, but Marner stuck to his no-trade clause and said no.

Now, with the NHL's salary cap rising by $7 million to a record $95.5 million this year, Marner can accomplish three things: He can get out of Toronto, where he's underappreciated; he can make a gazillion dollars as a free agent; and he can select a future home where the Stanley Cup banner has more of a chance to fly than it does in Toronto.

Considering that Marner and Connor McDavid connected so well in the Four Nations Face Off (remember, it was Marner's pass to McDavid that led to the winning goal in overtime), perhaps the Oilers could break the bank and sign the Leafs' star. On the other hand, it would be almost impossible for the Oilers to pay top dollar to three superstars and fit under the salary cap, no matter how high it goes.

While the Leafs came up short again, there were strides made in the Big Smoke. A division championship, development of some younger players (Matthew Knies and Bobby McMann for two) and a potential all-star goalie in Anthony Stolarz bodes well for the team's future.

If they have to call Ghostbusters to take care of that Ghost of 1967, so be it.

A shriek in the cemetery

Loggerhead Shrikes, our macabre songbird

Submitted
Grasslands News

Spring has sprung! With the return of the warmer weather our favourite birds have also arrived; ready to start their breeding season on the prairies. One of these species to return is our favourite gruesome little songbird, the Loggerhead Shrike. This predatory songbird, well known for their habit of impaling their prey on thorns or barbs, is on the lookout for ideal habitat; with pairs building nests and getting ready to lay eggs. Late May to early June is a great time to spot returning shrikes, as they are very active finding their perfect spots!

What is the ideal habitat for a predatory songbird? One of the best places to see shrikes while you are out and about may surprise you- or not, as it is quite fitting for a bird with such spooky habitats. Shrikes can readily be found in prairie cemeteries across Southern Loggerhead Shrike has been listed as a threatened species.

Saskatchewan, nesting in the old growth trees and shrubs that usually border the fenceline of these areas. "If you are visiting a loved one this summer in such a place, keep an eye out for these striking black, white, and grey birds!" Emily Putz, Shrubs for Shrikes coordinator with Nature Saskatchewan explains, "They have a distinct shrieking alarm call to keep an ear out for as well."

Loggerhead Shrikes

prefer cemeteries not just because flitting among gravestones fits their reputation, but because of the habitat cemeteries provide. "Prairie cemeteries are usually surrounded by pasture or crop, and the grass within them is usually mowed short, all ideal hunting areas to catch mice and insects," Putz further explains, "Paired with older growth shelterbelts, these areas really do form oases of habitat on our changing landscape.

For these reasons shrikes also prefer and can be found in abandoned yard sites, golf courses, and ball diamonds as well!"

The Loggerhead Shrike has been listed as a threatened species since the 1980s, with their range, once spanning the entirety of the prairie provinces, contracting to be mainly focused in Southern Saskatchewan and parts of SE Alberta. Habitat loss is the main driver of their decline, with the loss of both native prairie, and their adapted habitat of shelterbelts, disappearing.

Nature Saskatchewan runs a voluntary stewardship program, Shrubs for Shrikes, that works with rural landholders to conserve and monitor this species at risk. If you see a Loggerhead Shrike, or impaled prey, call the toll free HOOTline at 1-800-667-4668 or email outreach@naturesask.ca. Montmartre hosts 22nd Perogy Run

By Brad Brown
Grasslands News

Twenty-two years on, Montmartre's once-again annual Perogy Run remains as popular as ever, with 70 runners taking part in this year's event which was held Saturday, May 24.

First held in 2003, and run annually since with the exception of 2020 when it was cancelled due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Perogy Run includes all-ages races of five and 10 kilometres as well as a kids' 1-kilometre run, and is held as a fundraiser for the community's Centre 48 organization, which provides a wide range of educational, artistic and recreational programming throughout the year for residents of the village and surrounding area.

Connor Renouf and Amanda Schmeling, both of Regina, won the 10K and 5K races respectively in times of 40 minutes 20 seconds and 24:40 respectively.

Renouf was followed by Vibank's Andrew Dooremalen who ran the 10K in 48:40, while Hannah Perras took second in the 5K race with a time of 26:48.

Andy and Dylan Schmeling finished first and second in the kids' 1K race with times of 4:32 and 4:56.

Souris-Moose Mountain MP hits the ground running after election

By Ryan Kiedrowski
Local Journalism Initiative Reporter

From a voter's point of view, their work is finished once the ballot is cast. But for a new MP, the work is just beginning.

"There hasn't been any downtime," explained newly elected Souris-Moose Mountain MP Steven Bonk. "Right from the election to taking down signs and getting the election campaign wrapped up and doing all the documentation for that, right into new members orientation in Ottawa. I've been quite busy just getting organized in Ottawa, learning the ropes, and there's a lot of administration to get done before session starts, which would include training sessions, swearing in and basically just familiarizing myself with the systems in Ottawa."

With Parliament set to resume today (May 26) and the Speech from the Throne happening tomorrow, a lot of work behind the scenes needs to be done. Fortunately, with years of transferrable experience as an MLA in Moosomin-Montmartre, Bonk finds some similarities between the roles.

"I hope I'm not making a mistake by assuming that it will be similar to my role as an MLA in the provincial legislature, but so far, a lot of the process is the same or very similar," he observed. "So I think I have a bit of a running start when it comes to getting my feet under me in Ottawa!"

In that time between the election wrapping up and the spring session beginning, Bonk has also been busy with local matters.

"In the meantime, we've been quite busy already helping constituents and then there's also the business side here back in Souris-Moose Mountain, setting up offices, getting staff organized, and just preparing ourselves for the work ahead," he said.

As for his take on the new Liberal government's first few days, Bonk notes some confusion on what is actually being done.

"From the back and forth we've heard from the Liberals so far, it's hard to know what to think," he said. "We're hearing mixed messages coming from the Prime Minister and then quite often contradictory messages coming from his cabinet. The Liberals do have quite a poor track record of saying one thing and doing another, so we will see if they remain true to their word."

One example has been with Prime Minister Mark Carney vowing support for an energy pipeline on the campaign trail, but Heritage Minister Steven Guilbeault expressing the opposite view post-election.

"And not just Guilbeault, Dominic LeBlanc (Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs) also reiterated that the energy corridor would be about all sorts of electricity infrastructure, and he said 'not necessarily pipelines'," Bonk said. "So that's also a reason for concern for people in our riding."

We're in the heartland of production here when it comes to conventional oil production in Saskatchewan, and it's extremely important to us that we have a way to get our product to market. Pipelines are the most efficient way to get our product to market."

The spring session runs from May 26 to June 20, with MPs breaking for the summer until Sept. 15. Bonk plans to spend the summer with committee work, but he says the most important—and enjoyable—part of his job is meeting with the people of Souris-Moose Mountain.

"It will be time to get out into the constituency and meet more people, to hear their concerns and tell them about the work that the opposition is doing to represent them in Ottawa," he said.

As for the four weeks of this first session after the election, it will be interesting to see exactly what will be discussed.

"It's unprecedented to have no budget planned—especially coming from a former Bank of Canada governor," said Bonk. "It's just mind-boggling. It's very interesting times and concerning times in Canada at the moment, and I know our opposition will do everything we can to hold this government to account and hopefully force an election as soon as we can."

"With an increased number of seats on the opposition side, we have quite a diverse and strong team, and I'm looking forward to doing some really good work to hold the Liberals to account," Bonk concluded.

Retired teacher shares her new book at library

By Sarah Pacio
Grasslands News

Retired teacher Constance MacKenzie visited Grenfell Library last week to share her recently published thriller, Deadly Disclosure.

The library hosted the book talk on May 21 and community members were eager to hear about the new novel.

MacKenzie was an elementary and middle school teacher in Saskatchewan for 35 years, and much of her career was spent at Grenfell Elementary School. When she retired in 2014, MacKenzie told her Grade 5 class that she planned to publish a book.

This promise was fulfilled last September when Deadly Disclosure was officially released by Pegasus Publishers.

As a teacher MacKenzie often prepared creative writing examples for her students and this developed her own skills as well.

In addition to teaching, MacKenzie had experience working on her family farm. The many hours she spent operating a cultivator and daydreaming about "what if..." scenarios, combined with her literary abilities and an interest in investigative journalism, led MacKenzie to write a murder mystery set in Saskatchewan.

Deadly Disclosure is directed to an adult audience and features a journalist named Cathy Parker who spent her teenage years in rural Saskatchewan.

As an adult Cathy investigates the tragic murder of her fiancé, eventually discovering the truth from an unexpected source.

Since the novel was released last fall, MacKenzie has engaged with readers through sessions like the one at Grenfell Library. MacKenzie now lives in Saskatoon but she is still known to many Grenfell residents, including some of those who gathered for her presentation last Wednesday.

She gave a brief explanation of how the book was developed, mentioning her grandson's assistance with the cover design, and then read an excerpt aloud. They listened eagerly and some purchased a book to read the rest of the story or asked the author to sign their copy.

MacKenzie willingly added her autograph to the books but provided a personal note on a separate card which, in true teacher fashion, included an assignment.

The note card advised that they "read to discover the meaning of the gladiola" in preparation for the book's sequel.

MacKenzie plans to complete two more books for the series about Cathy Parker and is already composing the next story. It is set along the Trans-Canada Highway and features a university professor who demonstrates some eccentricities such as a particular interest in mummification.

"I'm enjoying it as I'm writing it, and I figure if I'm enjoying it then hopefully the readers do to," MacKenzie commented.

Deadly Disclosure can be purchased from McNally Robinson or Barnes & Noble bookstores, and from Amazon or Pegasus Publishers. Copies of MacKenzie's book are also available to borrow from libraries in Grenfell and Saskatoon.

Team effort

Beautification Melville, with the help of The River Youth group and adult helpers, teamed up with the clean up of Martha's Garden at St. Peter's hospital. Trimming, pulling weeds, edging flower beds and raking leaves filled many black bags. All at the same time learning the difference from a weed and a flower. Thank you to Jay Exner and his team that are always ready to encourage and lead this youth group to support and build community pride.

PUBLIC NOTICE NOTICE OF INTENTION TO ADOPT BYLAW NO. 477/2025

Public notice is hereby given that the Council of the Town of Balgonie intends to adopt a Bylaw, under The Planning and Development Act, 2007, to amend Bylaw No. 374/2014, known as the Zoning Bylaw.

INTENT:

The proposed Bylaw will allow for a reduced minimum frontage for public parks and outdoor recreational areas within the Community Service (CS) District and prohibit the use or erection of temporary garages (fabric covered structures) over 9.3 m² (100 sq. feet) in all Zoning Districts.

REASON FOR THE AMENDMENT:

The reason for reducing the minimum frontage for parks in the CS District is to accommodate the proposed upgrades to Greenall School.

PUBLIC INSPECTION:

Any person may inspect the Bylaw at the Town of Balgonie Municipal Office Monday to Friday between 9 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. excluding statutory holidays. Copies are available for a cost at the Municipal Office.

PUBLIC HEARING:

Council will hold a public hearing to receive submissions on the proposed Bylaw on June 23, 2025 at 7 p.m. at the Town of Balgonie Council Chambers. Council will also consider written submissions received at the hearing or delivered to the undersigned at the municipal office before the hearing. For further information, please contact the Municipal Office at 306-771-2284.

Issued at the Town of Balgonie, this 30th day of May, 2025.

RCMP investigating fatal rollover near Dunleath

Submitted
Grasslands News

On Thursday, May 22, at approximately 5:15 p.m., Yorkton RCMP received a report of a single-vehicle rollover on Highway #10, near Dunleath, SK.

Officers responded along with local fire and EMS. The sole occupant of the vehicle was declared deceased by EMS at the scene.

He has been identified as a 34-year-old male from Keeseekoose First Nation. His family has been notified.

Yorkton RCMP continue to investigate with the assistance of a Saskatchewan RCMP collision reconstructionist.

Public Notice

RM of Lajord No. 128

Zoning Bylaw Ammendment

Public notice is hereby given that the Council of the Rural Municipality of Lajord No. 128 intends to adopt a bylaw under The Planning and Development Act, 2007 to amend Bylaw No. 2022-13, known as the Zoning Bylaw.

INTENT: To amend the Zoning Bylaw by:

1. Adding Dwelling Groups and Small-Scale Manufacturing Steel Services as discretionary uses in the Country Residential 1 District (CR1); and
2. Rezoning all that portion of the SE ¼ 23-13-16 W2M shown within the red outlined below, from Agricultural District (A) to Country Residential 1 District (CR1).

AFFECTED LANDS: Country Residential 1 District (CR1) lands within the Rural Municipality of Lajord No. 128 and that portion of the SE ¼ 23-13-16 W2M. As shown below.

REASON: To accommodate a dwelling group within the SE ¼ 23-13-16 W2M.

PUBLIC INSPECTION:

Any person may inspect the bylaw at the Rural Municipality of Lajord No. 128 office between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, excluding statutory holidays. Copies are available at cost.

PUBLIC HEARING: Council will hold a Public Hearing on June 10th, 2025, at 9 a.m. at the RM Office to hear any person or group that wants to comment on the proposed bylaw. Council will also consider written comments received at the hearing or delivered to the undersigned at the Municipal Office before the hearing.

Issued at the Rural Municipality of Lajord No. 128, this 22nd day of May 2025.

Flower boxes prepared for seasonal planting

By Alan Hustak
Grasslands News

With the return of warm weather gardens began to take shape this week.

Members of Fort Qu'Appelle's Communities in Bloom were busy on Tuesday changing the soil and fertilizing the 70 planters that the group maintains around town throughout the summer.

The national program is designed to beautify and foster pride in participating communities.

The theme this year is

"Edible Gardens."

Bloomers will be co-operating with the food bank to grow tomatoes, vegetables and edible flowers.

The flowers and greenery in the parks and the planters around town will be planted this weekend.

Edible Gardens

Bloomers Cathy Boehme, Evelyn Lee and Jacqui Bangle dig in to prepare the flower boxes that will be planted this weekend.
